Sub-Saharan Africa received a total of $12.7 billion in U.S. foreign aid in 2024[2]. The overall U.S. foreign assistance budget for 2024 was about $41 billion[2]. Aid volumes fluctuate, and some smaller countries or those with limited diplomatic presence may receive minimal direct support (see Comoros or Eswatini, for example)[1].

European and OECD Donor Aid

- Net bilateral ODA flows from DAC (Development Assistance Committee) members to Africa stood at $42 billion in 2024[9]. This includes all European OECD donors but is not broken down by country in the search results.

- The European Union and its member states collectively remain among the top donors to nearly every African country, especially for humanitarian, infrastructure, governance, and development assistance, though specific country breakdowns for 2024 were not found in the search results[8][9].

Total Development Assistance to Africa (Combined US and European/OECD Donors):

- U.S.: $12.7 billion (sub-Saharan Africa, 2024)[2]

- OECD/Europe (estimate): $42 billion (all Africa, 2024)[9][8]
